“ I met Margaret several years ago and instantly loved the wild, crazy, "I don't give a damn" approach she had on life. She was a woman that wanted little more than to be liked by others, and although she chose to live her life as she wanted rather than what was best, she was a woman that I always defended as "my friend". And I knew that I was hers. I often described her as "not someone that I would call if I ever wound up in jail...because she would be sitting next to me saying "we really did it this time!". She just had that fun, party girl side to her. The one that most of us never show, but secretly wonder what it would be like "just once". I will miss that beautiful, welcoming smile, and so, to Margaret I say "Party on, my friend. I will miss you". Cheryl###imported-begin##Cheryl & Dave##imported-end##
