“ How do I pinpoint one thing that I could share with you about Dad, when there are so many things? Like the way he would call you by a different name. He would call me Pete and I called him George, or on Saturday afternoons we got to eat in the living room while we watched roller derby. Dad and I had our nightly ritual. We would be watching television; then when it was time Dad would make a swishing noise and motion his thumb like an umpire, which meant I'm out of there, and off to bed. But before I did I would give him a big hug and I would say MMM. Then I would give him, not just one kiss but two. We called this, MMM, tweet, tweet. This later became the way that we would say bye.

MMM, tweet, tweet Daddy, I love you,
